WEBINAR SERIES

JANET ROBERTSON - WEDNESDAY 9TH SEPTEMBER 2020

Planning for Learning Outdoors

Consider the amount of time children and educators spend outdoors? Now consider the educational program and the documentation which has a focus on learning? Is there a balance here? Learning outdoors can provide ample opportunities for children to learn beyond physical development, however we as educators need to shift our focus on planning outdoors and celebrate the amazing learning opportunities that await. In this online session we will explore how to plan and assess learning which takes place in the great outdoors.

Janet Robertson graduated in 1973 from the SYDNEY kindergarten teachers college, and after an extended European adventure working within architecture, town planning and community activism, began teaching in 1977. Janet come from a family of gardeners, and know that being outside is essential for wellbeing. So it was natural she gravitated to the outdoors in early childhood settings. She was first taught in a centre with a rooftop playground, supplemented with weekly walks within the community. Later she had the privilege of 25 years developing the playground at Mia Mia.

GREG DEAN - WEDNESDAY 14TH OCTOBER 2020

Leading by Design at all Levels

Leadership goes beyond a title. The mindful and deliberate leadership behaviours displayed by all of us in an organisation help our staff and colleagues feel connected to the broader purpose. They are a big predictor of whether our people stay, engage and deliver. In the face of information overload, constant change, and doing more with less however, many of us can fall into a default mode – one of “keep doing what got me where I am, to get me where I need to go”. Good people leadership practices and the important conversations (if they happen at all) occur 'on the fly'. Often the result is frustration, disengagement and ultimately poor performance at both individual and organisational levels. During this interactive session we will examine what's missing from the modern employment (psychological) contract and explore how to develop a clearer sense of purpose. We will look at practical, deliberate and mindful leadership behaviours that make the biggest difference. You will have the opportunity to reflect on and discuss your own leadership challenges and develop a brief action plan for generating some quick leadership wins.
